Al Ain University is applying the "Work from Home" System

Al Ain University announced the activation of the «Work from Home» system for the academic and administrative staff in its both campuses, Al Ain and Abu Dhabi, where the percentage of workers who will be at the workplace shouldn't exceed 10% of the total numbers of workers in the university. This decision came within the framework of the procedures followed by the UAE government to prevent the spreading coronavirus (COVID 19) to preserve the safety and health of the society.

Al Ain University launches "Remote" student initiatives and activities

In order to protect the health of students and to provide a comprehensive academic experience of distance learning, Al Ain University has launched a set of "remote" student initiatives and activities by providing virtual entertainment, sports and other interactive remote activities. This is in conjunction with the activation of the distance learning system for all students in UAE, in light of the efforts to counter the spread of the Corona virus.

AAU enhances all its means to communicate with the students through social media and remote work programs such as «MS Teams», to raise their morale and to provide academic advising to them, which helps to maintain their daily contacts with the university.

To further enhance the student interaction and activity, the Students' Affairs Deanship organized a digital sport weekly challenge, where the students challenge each other by practicing some exercises at home and broadcast it via video. Moreover, another initiative called "Do Not Stop Learning" was launched to motivate students to photograph their study diaries and broadcast them through social media accounts. Valuable prizes for the winner of the best video were set.
